

During the UNIV 1001: Online Education Strategies course, I have acquired valuable knowledge and skills for successful online learning. Key takeaways include the importance of effective time management, the surprising benefits of peer assessment, and the evolution of my perception towards it.

One of the most useful strategies I have learned is effective time management. Recognizing the significance of planning and organizing my schedule, I now allocate ample time for studying, completing assignments, and participating in discussions. This approach ensures that I stay on track with my coursework and maintain a balanced approach to my studies. Moving forward, I plan to continue applying this strategy by creating weekly study plans, establishing clear deadlines, and prioritizing tasks based on their importance and due dates. This way, I can optimize my learning experience and fulfill all course requirements at UoPeople.

The most surprising revelation of this term has been the impact of peer assessment. Initially, I had reservations about evaluating my peers' work, questioning its reliability and fairness. However, as the term progressed, I discovered that peer assessment is a valuable learning experience. Beyond evaluating the work of others, it exposes me to diverse perspectives and approaches. Engaging in peer assessment has allowed me to provide constructive feedback, identify strengths and areas for improvement, and deepen my own understanding of the subject matter. This unexpected realization has made me appreciate peer assessment as a collaborative and enriching process that enhances my own growth and learning. It has surpassed my initial expectations.

At the beginning of the course, I felt apprehensive about peer assessment. However, as time passed, my perception evolved, and I now embrace its benefits. I have become more comfortable with the process and recognize its advantages. Peer assessment offers me the opportunity to gain insights from my peers' work, broaden my perspectives, and refine my own understanding. Evaluating my peers' work has not only enhanced my ability to provide constructive feedback but also deepened my comprehension of the subject matter through the evaluation process. I have come to value the diverse perspectives and collaborative learning potential inherent in the peer assessment model.

In conclusion, the UNIV 1001 course has equipped me with essential strategies for effective online learning, with time management standing out as particularly valuable. The surprising discovery of the positive impact of peer assessment has shifted my perception, and I now appreciate its role in facilitating collaborative learning and personal growth. As I progress in my studies at UoPeople, I will apply these strategies and embrace the opportunities for peer assessment, leveraging them to enhance my learning experience and contribute to a supportive academic community.
